China is the great hope for the world. It is the largest populated country with huge intake of world's Gross Domestic Product of over US$ 12.1 trillion or 15 percent of global GDP. He is a great follower of Mao and Deng and strictly adheres to Socialism with changing Chinese characteristics of time. As a globalist, he floated the idea of the Belt and Road connectivity. A new powerful China is emerging under his leadership. Military mechanization combined with Information Technology (IT) along with strategic capabilities will be achieved by 2020. The overall modernization of the national armed forces will be completed by 2035.

5. Global Power

China will never seek political hegemony or expansion in world politics and would adhere to its policy of peaceful co-existence. This means China's new era would herald a win-win cooperation under its policies including Belt and Road connectivity to bind humanity and all races across the globe and sharing China's successes. Avoiding war will govern Chinese policy in world's affairs. China would decrease its enmity with powers and would improve relations with the United States and Japan and others. This would be China's peaceful rise. This is how President Xi vows his country's global contribution in the next five years and beyond.

Conclusion

A broader policy framework to achieve salient goals in the next five years has been set out by the CPC in its 19th Congress. President Xi has been elevated to the highest stature and proved to be the strong leader. Efforts are being made at the Party level to make China a great and powerful nation in the future. The economic fundamentals are certainly impressive. To alleviate 60 million people out of poverty in the past five years is nothing less than a miracle. The return to a high growth rate too has steadily restored confidence to build an even stronger and sustained economy.
