World Environment Day

Aizaz Ahmad Chaudhry

Director General, ISSI

The World Environment Day that we celebrate today is a reminder that we must enhance our knowledge and responsible conduct in preserving environment for our ecosystem, biodiversity, and the future of human life. This year, the theme of UNEP's World Environment Day 2020 is “Celebrate Biodiversity”. Pakistan is among the most affected countries by Climate Change which is leading to habitat degradation and biodiversity losses in the country. We all must, therefore, commit to overcoming environmental degradation and creating a greener and healthier environment, through enhanced knowledge and environment, and sensitive conduct. We have to be responsible in the way we interact with nature, as the future of human life is inextricably linked with protecting and maintaining high biodiversity. As the world battles the COVID-19 pandemic, among other environmental disasters, it is imperative that everyone comes together to support environmental initiatives and preserve it for our future generations.
